ERRATUM

In the August 1990 issue of PSYCHIATRY (Vol. 53, No. 3) the following material from "Improving Treatment for the Severely Mentally Ill: Implications of the Decade-Long Italian Psychiatric Reform" by Ira D. Glick inadvertently contained an error. The correct material is reprinted here:

The principal goals of the 1978 law were:

- 1) to achieve the closing of mental hospitals and abolish a system viewed as being based on constraint and control; 2) to create decentralized community services for preventing mental illness and treating and rehabilitating mental patients; 3) to accord priority to voluntary psychiatric treatment over compulsory treatment, and to eliminate the concept of the dangerousness of mental patients; 4) to promote comprehensive treatment, particularly through services outside a hospital framework. [Cassano et al. 1985]
